Removal of ancillary site at Tyndale north interchange, Tyndale

Transport for NSW, Pacific Complete and its contractor partners are working together to deliver the Woolgoolga to Ballina Pacific Highway upgrade.

In September, the project team will start demobilising the ancillary site at Tyndale north interchange, Tyndale. This work will take about six weeks to complete, weather permitting.

Work will involve:

- excavating hardstand and fill areas
- up to 250 heavy vehicle movements per day on Big River Way and the Pacific Motorway to remove material and equipment
- restoring and revegetating the land once all materials and equipment have been removed

What happens next?

After the site has been demobilised and all materials and equipment have been removed, the land will be restored to its original condition. Some areas near the new highway will be planted with vegetation in line with the project’s urban design and landscape plan, which is available to view at pacifichighway.nsw.gov.au.

There is still work to be done to finish the upgrade between Glenugie and Maclean. After the ancillary site is demobilised, contractors will operate from other locations as work continues in this section.

How we manage our work

The project team will use machinery that generates noise and vibration. To manage this work we will:

- locate equipment such as generators as far as possible from residences
- turn off machinery when not in use
- plan activities to minimise noise from reversing vehicles
- monitor noise and implement further mitigation measures, if required

All work will be carried out in line with the project’s Conditions of Approval and Construction Environmental Management Plan.
