Woolgoolga to Ballina Pacific Highway upgrade

Tyndale to Maclean - Project update

Bondi Hill Road overpass looking south

March 2020

Opening the new motorway between Tyndale and Maclean

In March, a 12 kilometre section of new motorway between Tyndale and Maclean will open to traffic. As part of this traffic change motorists will experience smoother, safer and more reliable journeys with better flood immunity and more readily available alternative routes.

The existing Pacific Highway between Glenugie and Maclean will be renamed Big River Way. Big River Way will continue to connect communities across the region as sections of the upgraded highway are opened to traffic and the existing highway is bypassed.

At Tyndale there will be a split interchange. Tyndale north interchange will open in its permanent arrangement as part of this first traffic change. Tyndale south interchange will open as part of the upgrade between Tyndale and Glenugie.

The interchange at Maclean will open in two stages.

Stage one: The eastern roundabout and two temporary intersections will provide access to the new carriageway, while work continues to build the western roundabout. This temporary arrangement will be in place for about three months, weather permitting.

Stage two: The permanent northbound on and off ramps, western roundabout and overpass bridge will open to traffic.

Accessing the new motorway

Once the interchanges open to traffic, motorists will access and exit the motorway at a number of new locations.

Maclean interchange temporary arrangement

Southbound motorists will use the southbound on and off ramps for access to and from the Pacific Motorway.

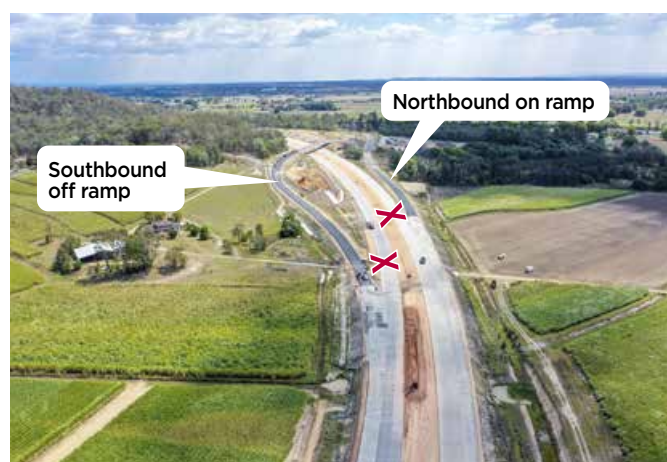

Southbound motorists will have temporary access to Maclean via Jubilee Street while work continues to build the western roundabout.

Northbound motorists will access the Pacific Motorway at a temporary intersection about 300 metres south of Ferry Park (near Edwards Creek). Access to local businesses or residences on Big River Way between Maclean and Tyndale remains the same.

Tyndale north interchange

Tyndale north interchange includes a southbound off ramp and a northbound on ramp. To travel north of Tyndale, motorists can access the new carriageway via the northbound on ramp or continue via Big River Way to Maclean.

A new intersection will open at Tyndale providing access to the northbound on ramp and Big River Way between Tyndale and Maclean.

Although the Tyndale north interchange will open in its permanent arrangement, all traffic will continue to use the existing Pacific Highway (Big River Way) between Glenugie and Tyndale. The existing Pacific Highway will be renamed Big River Way once this section of the upgrade is open to traffic.

View the inset map to familiarise yourself with the new temporary and permanent access points.

How will the work affect you?

We will be moving traffic onto the new section of road during the day. Before opening the road, traffic will be stopped for up to 10 minutes on the highway and local roads.

Big River Way*

The new local road name will be published in the NSW Government Gazette and local newspapers. Property owners affected by the changes will receive a letter from Clarence Valley Council with formal notification of their new address. Clarence Valley Council will provide new address information to Australia Post, Australian Electoral Commission, Australian Taxation Office and emergency services.

Think PAC – Plan, Awareness, Caution

There will be delays and motorists should avoid travel or seek alternative routes on the night of the traffic change. If you must travel, before driving we ask motorists to remember PAC to help make your journey as safe and efficient as possible.
